Says Her Husband Attempted Suicide

To Humiliate Her Persons have been known to go to great extremes to humiliate others, but it is doubtful if anyone ever committed suicide for this reason. Yet Rosa Lee Camp, in a bill for divorce, filed Monday in circuit court against West Harris Camp, alleged that he "threatened to commit suicide, and then tried it, solely for the purpose of humiliating and annoying her." She also charges Camp with cruel and inhuman treatment and abandonment, in her bill, which was filed by Attorney L. H. Graves.

She and Camp have two children, Mrs. Camp alleges, and in addition to a decree for divorce, she asks support for the children.

Lucie Stout Smith also filed suit for divorce from John Samuel Smith in circuit court Monday.

Members of the Catone family were taken to St. Joseph's hospital. The wife and daughter were reported as resting well Monday, nothing beyond a shaking up being suffered from the accident.

The place left vacant in the lower house by John Galella is the seat for which Mr. Riddick is running. His prominence makes it probable that he will have no opposition for the place. Frank J. Rice, state revenue agent and state senator in 1919, Monday said that he had not resigned as a state senator from Shelby county because he had been appointed state revenue agent. Mr. Rice stated that other revenue agents had served in the state legislalature from time to time, and therefore he did not propose to resign, particularly at this time, when he wanted to cast his vote in favor of woman suffrage. freme court.

larly at this time, when he wanted to cast his vote in favor of woman suffrage. Mr. Rice, at the regular session of the legislature last winter, voted against suffrage for he did not believe it would attract the best element of women in Tennessee, and particularly in West Tennessee and Shelby county that it did in the municipal election last November. This experience proved to him that his position had been erroneous, and he now stands ready to vote and fight for the passage of the amendment at the special session called by Gov. Roberts.

Senator Rice states that the senate is the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, and therefore he has no doubt that he will retain his seat as an ember of that body.

Mr. Rice pointed out Monday that John I. Cox, who served in the legislature and wab later was governor, had been a state revenue agent while in the legislative body. He also pointed to Representative Hock and Senator Parks Worley, who both served as legislators, while holding office as state revenue agents.

It is understood that Joseph Hanover, member of the lower house in the 1911 legislature, and whose place was declared vacant along with that of Rice and Galella by the state's attorney general, will battle for his sent on the floor of the house at the extra session.
